The best way to think about the difference between the two is to remember that confidentiality is an ethical duty you, as the lawyer, owe your client, and you can be disciplined for violating it. The attorney-client privilege, on the other hand, is governed by an evidentiary rule protecting your communications with your client from disclosure during litigation or another proceeding.

Confidentiality, Privilege or Both?

In the wrong hands, confidential information can be misused to commit illegal activity (e.g., fraud or discrimination), which can in turn result in costly lawsuits for the employer. Many states have laws protecting the confidentiality of certain information in the workplace. The disclosure of sensitive employee and management information can lead to a loss of employee trust, confidence and loyalty.
