Like dandelion, it's very possible that purslane wiped out native species when it arrived, but the settlers weren't keeping track, so we really have no idea. Eating a bunch of purslane, even wiping out a local patch or two isn't going to do any damage to your environment. (Provided you don't use chemicals, of course). Of course, I don't recommend eating something till you wipe it out, because ...

Being an avid hunter with an interest in both fowl and four-legged game, both large and small, I've enjoyed following the NDA through the years. Living and mainly hunting in Finland, it strikes me that I've never come across articles about whitetail populations outside North America. White-tailed deer have been exported to several locations through ... Read More. Read More. Herd Monitoring ...

We don't have a car and live in a major urban center so the only grocery stores near are pricey. I think we could cut down on expenses definitely by shopping at Costco but the closest one is a 40 minute bike ride away (or an hour and 15 minutes using public transit lol figure that one out). Anyway, let's just say I'm working on it. Reply; Amber March 19, 2016, 2:15 pm. Late to the ...
